

Announcement from the Nagoya Child Advocacy Committee

The new term will soon begin, bringing excitement for the return to school life to many students, with memories of the vacation still in their hearts.

On the other hand, there are worries and concerns that come from returning after a long break. While discussing with your child about their school life and their friends, if there is anything you may be concerned about, please feel comfortable sharing these concerns with your child's teacher, school counselor, or other professional.

For example, if your child:

- has a sudden loss of interest in things they had shown interest in before,
- often appears anxious or irritated, and it's difficult for them to concentrate,
- feels sick, with symptoms such as headaches or stomachaches, or
- avoids talking about school or their friends.
